PART 3: TRANSITIONAL PROVISIONS AND LEGAL CONTINUITY

37 Continuity of existing acts

(1) Any Regulatory Legislative Act or other written instrument made or issued by a Governing Body of the Administration before the commencement of these Regulations and in force immediately before their commencement continues to have effect according to its terms, notwithstanding any inconsistencies with these Regulations, until it expires, is amended, or a new Regulatory Legislative Act supersedes and replaces the prior legislative act in its entirety.

(2) Any written instrument referred to in sub-Article (1) is not invalid solely because it was made or issued before the commencement of these Regulations or because its form or the procedure by which it was made or issued does not comply with the requirements introduced by these Regulations.

(3) Where a Regulatory Legislative Act is made pursuant to these Regulations and there is in force, immediately before its effective date, another regulatory legislative act or written instrument of a Governing Body of the Administration concerning the same subject matter, the new Regulatory Legislative Act on the same matter may, so far as practicable and desirable, preserve and continue the substantive effect of that prior regulatory legislative act.

(4) Sub-Articles (1) – (3) do not preserve, or permit the preservation of, any provision of a regulatory legislative act or a written instrument to the extent that it is inconsistent with the Constitution of the Republic of Kazakhstan or the Constitutional Law on Alatau City.

(5) Nothing in these Regulations affects any right, obligation, liability, decision, approval, authorisation or other legal effect arising under a regulatory legislative act or a written instrument continued in force under sub-Article (1).

38 Ongoing procedures

Any procedure for the preparation, consideration, consultation, approval or adoption of a Regulatory Legislative Act or other written instrument that commenced before the commencement of these Regulations may continue and be conducted as if it was commenced in accordance with these Regulations.

39 References to existing acts and written instruments

A reference in any act or other written instrument to an act or written instrument continued under Article 37 is to be construed as a reference to that act or written instrument as amended, replaced or otherwise continued from time to time, unless the context requires otherwise.

40 Further transitional arrangements

(1) A Regulatory Legislative Act may make such further transitional, savings or consequential provisions as are necessary or appropriate in connection with its commencement or the transition to the legislative framework established under the Constitutional Law on Alatau City and these Regulations.

(2) Until the procedures and requirements referred to in Articles 21(5), 22(5) and 23(5) come into effect, the Chief Executive Officer may, by Regulatory Order, establish temporary procedures and requirements for the preparation, review, consultation, submission and approval or enactment, as applicable, of Regulations, Rules and Regulatory Orders, as well as other procedures relating thereto.
